Playing with Ideas The Affective Dynamics of Creative Play – Pat Power Through an integrated investigation of emotion, play, and creativity, this interdisciplinary study analyzes the affective nature of playfulness, explores it as feeling or attitude in an adult context, and maps its relationship to the creative process.

Playing with Ideas The Affective Dynamics of Creative Play

Affective dynamics is an important phenomenon that has not received much emphasis, so tests of the predictions pertaining to affective transitions is an important step in validating the model. An analysis at an even finer level of granularity would involve simultaneously testing both the predicted transitions as well as the events that are hypothesized to trigger these transitions.

Analyzing Brain Dynamics of Affective Engagement

Researchers have examined, for example, emotions in the production of scientific knowledge, patients' or users' affective experiences of technologies, and emotionally charged cultural representations of science. However, less attention has been paid to the underlying affective dynamics that connect these sites, experiences and representations.

affective dynamics revealed transitions between confusion and frustration to be significantly more likely than chance, with transitions specifically from confusion to frustration being especially prominent. The presence of learner-centered emotions state. Understanding affective dynamics may therefore make it possible to develop more successful detectors of affect. Hence, modeling and understanding affective dynamics may lead to the development of more accurate and useful affective learning environments. However, there has only been limited research, thus far, into affective dynamics.

Second, affective dynamics should be assessed within each individual (i.e., intraindividual) and can be viewed in varying time frames (i.e., momentary, daily, weekly). At a more molecular level, one can examine the momentary differentiation of affective experience.

Extending B. L. Fredrickson's (1998) broaden-and-build theory of positive emotions and M. Losada's (1999) nonlinear dynamics model of team performance, the authors predict that a ratio of positive to negative affect at or above 2.9 will characterize individuals in flourishing mental health.

counted for in terms of three fundamental affective processes: the affective homebase, affective variability, and attractor strength. An additional advantage of utilizing this framework is that it operationalizes emotional dynamics into specific parameters that can specifically be tested (e.g., Carpenter & Trull, 2013).
